Abstract

Based on an extensive bibliographic review, an updated checklist of epicaridean isopods belonging to Bopyroidea recorded from Mexico is provided. A total of 55 species distributed in 3 families, 10 subfamilies and 39 genera are listed. Of these, 8 species (14.5%) have been registered only in Mexico so far, 36 species (65.4%) are distributed along the Atlantic coast and 19 (34.5%) along the Pacific coast. The lower diversity of these parasites in the latter region could reveal insufficient sampling of potential hosts. Approximately 80% of the bopyrid species parasitize individuals belonging to the infraorders Caridea (27 species, 50%) and Anomura (17 species, 30.9%). Type-localities and updated data on their known geographic ranges along both Mexican coast and those of other regions are included for all the species.

Keywords: Bopyrids; Decapoda; Caridea; Ectoparasites

Resumen

Con base en una extensa revisión bibliográfica, se proporciona una lista actualizada de los isópodos epicarideos pertenecientes a Bopyroidea registrados en México. Se enumera un total de 55 especies distribuidas en 3 familias, 10 subfamilias y 39 géneros. De ellas, 8 especies (14.5%) han sido registradas solo en México hasta ahora, 36 especies (65.4%) se distribuyen en la costa atlántica y 19 (34.4%) en la costa del Pacífico. La baja diversidad de estos parásitos en la última región podría reflejar la insuficiente recolección de hospederos potenciales. Aproximadamente, 80% de las especies de bopíridos parasitan individuos de los infraórdenes Caridea (27 especies, 50%) y Anomura (17 especies, 30.9%). Para todas las especies se proporcionan las localidades tipo y datos actualizados sobre su distribución geográfica en las costas de México y otras regiones.

Introduction

The order Isopoda, one of the most diverse groups of arthropods, with more than 10,655 recognized species (Boyko et al., 2024a) and widely distributed in a large variety of both terrestrial and aquatic habitats, includes some groups with a parasitic lifestyle (Boxshall & Hayes, 2019), such as those of the suborder Epicaridea. This suborder of parasites currently represents more than 8% of all known extant isopods and includes 261 genera in the superfamilies Bopyroidea and Cryptoniscoidea (Boyko & Williams, 2023). Bopyroidea has 3 families: Bopyridae, Entoniscidae and Ionidae (Boyko et al., 2013), of which Bopyridae is the largest and best-defined (Trilles, 1999). They use other crustaceans as hosts, with nearly all the species requiring a copepod intermediate host as well as decapods, peracarids or cirripedes as definitive hosts to complete their life cycles (Williams & Boyko, 2012).

Bopyrid isopods, except those of the endoparasitic subfamily Entophilinae, are obligate crustacean ectoparasites found mainly on decapods (Poulin, 1995; Williams & Boyko, 2012). The females are much larger than the males and have distorted bodies, so much so that in some species they are barely recognizable as isopods, whereas the males are more similar to free-living isopods (Román-Contreras, 2008).

The first bopyrid described from the American continent was Argeia pugettensis, in Puget Sound, northwest USA, by Dana (1853), parasitizing Metacrangon munita (Dana) (as Crangon munitus). Shortly after, Leidy (1855) reported Leidya distorta (as Cepon distortus) infesting the fiddler crab Leptuca pugilator (Bosc) (as Gelasimus pugilator) for Atlantic City, New Jersey, USA, and the number of described species from North America has increased gradually, especially during the 20th Century (Markham, 1985).

In Mexico, Bathygyge grandis Hansen, 1897, Pseudione galacantha Hansen, 1897 and Parargeia ornata Hansen, 1897 were the first bopyrids reported from the Pacific coast (Hansen, 1897), while Probopyrus bithynis Richardson, 1904 was the first bopyrid recorded from the Atlantic coast (Pearse, 1911). Currently, the estimated bopyrid diversity in Mexico is of approximately 50 species (Aguilar-Perera, 2022; Román-Contreras, 2008; Romero-Rodríguez & Álvarez, 2019, 2023a, b; Romero-Rodríguez & Martínez-Mayén, 2017). However, information on the geographic range and host selection of this group of parasites is outdated and scattered in the literature. The aim of this study is thus to provide an updated and complete checklist of species of Bopyroidea and their associate hosts occurring in Mexico.

Materials and methods

The present checklist is based on an extensive review of literature reporting on biological material examined for species of Bopyroidea from Mexico. The arrangement of families, subfamilies, genera and species listed follows Boxshall and Hayes (2019) and Boyko et al. (2024b), and only references of the authorities of parasitic isopods are provided. Type-locality, records from Mexico, general geographic distribution and hosts are cited for each species and, when required, the current taxonomic status of hosts is indicated in square brackets.

Discussion

Parasitic isopods of the 3 families included in Bopyroidea have been recorded in Mexico, although the bulk of the species (94.5%) belongs to the family Bopyridae, with 8 of its 10 subfamilies (except for Orbioninae and Pleurocryptellinae) represented by at least 1 species. Regarding the genera, the most numerous are in the subfamilies Bopyrinae and Pseudioninae (11 each), with 19 species recorded for the first subfamily and 17 species for the second. Only 1 genus and 1 species have been recorded for each of the subfamilies Argeinae, Bathygiginae and Phyllocladinae, while the families Entoniscidae and Ionidae are represented by 2 and 1 species, respectively.

About 80% of the bopyrid species examined used individuals belonging to the infraorders Caridea (27 species, 50%) and Anomura (17 species, 30.9%) as hosts. The bopyrid species attached to caridean hosts have been recorded mainly in the families Alpheidae (9 species), Palaemonidae (6 species), Thoridae (5 species) and Hippolytidae (4 species), while those attached to anomuran hosts have been recorded in the families Diogenidae (5 species), Porcellanidae (4 species), Munidopsidae (3 species), Paguridae (3 species) and Munididae (2 species) (Table 1).

Of the 55 species currently registered in Mexico, only 8 (14.5%) occur exclusively in the country. Per region, 36 species (65.4%) are distributed along the Atlantic coast and 19 species (34.5%) are distributed along the Pacific coast (Table 1). The states that contribute the largest number of species along the Atlantic coast are Veracruz (13), Quintana Roo (13) and Campeche (11), whereas for Tamaulipas and Tabasco only 3 and 2 species, respectively, have been recorded. Along the Pacific coast, the largest number of records of these parasites is in Baja California (10 species), followed by Baja California Sur (5 species), Sonora and Guerrero (4 species each) and Sinaloa, Nayarit, Colima, Jalisco, Michoacán and Oaxaca (2 species each).

The lower diversity of Bopyroidea along the Pacific coast compared with the Atlantic coast of Mexico could be an underestimation due to the great variety of habitats and diversity of crustaceans present in the first region, where large areas remain little studied, as is the Mexican southern Pacific (García-Madrigal et al., 2012; Romero-Rodríguez & Álvarez, 2023b). These data indicate that a greater effort is needed to improve knowledge of crustacean diversity in general, as well as on their symbionts, including the epicaridean isopods in the Mexican Pacific.
